

Elizabeth Kirley's teaching and research focuses on technology law, cybercrime, policing, artificial intelligence, and cognitive robotics as they engage issues of data retention, global health, reputational privacy, national security, and evidentiary challenges raised by what she characterizes as the emerging law of digital speech. In a series of recent publications, the humble emoji is examined as a nonverbal tool of crime and a means of conveying human diversity through social media. That body of work has inspired a book project titled Watch for the Signs: Nonverbal Cues as Legal Evidence. Dr Kirley has also worked on two research projects for Canada's Department of Defence Research and Development. Her life before law involved broadcast journalism.

Dr Kirley is currently teaching National Security Law at Osgoode Hall Law School as well as Issues in Criminal Law and Digital Crime and Cybersecurity for Osgoode's Professional Development Program. She has also served as Senior Lecturer and Chair of Technology Law at Deakin University in Melbourne, Australia and Assistant Professor at Ryerson University's Department of Criminology. She is called to the Ontario bar and has served as Assistant Crown Attorney, criminal defence counsel, and representative of the Office of the Children's Lawyer for the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General. She holds PhD and LLM degrees from Osgoode, a JD from the University of Western Ontario, and a BA and BEd from the University of Windsor.

Dr Kirley has received various distinctions for her work, including a Canada/France Foreign Government Award, European Union Centre of Excellence Award, the Oxford Internet Institute Summer Doctoral Program, the Osnabruck University Law & Culture Award, and two Nathanson Centre Fellowships at Osgoode. She has conducted research and presented her scholarship at various universities including the American Graduate School of Paris, l'École des hautes études commerciales de Paris, Sciences-Po University (Paris), the University of Toronto Munk School of Global Affairs, the International University Seminar in Chicago, the Quello School of Communications at Michigan State University, the University of Limerick Faculty of Law, Ireland, and the Instituto Universitario de Lisboa in Portugal.

While at the Nathanson Centre Dr Kirley will serve as co-editor, with Dr James Sheptycki of York University's Department of Criminology, for a memorial book project in honour of Dr Margaret Beare, the founding Director of the Nathanson Centre for Transnational Human Rights, Crime, and Security and mentor over many years to numerous graduate students both at Osgoode and at York University's Department of Sociology.